OF JOHN S. WISE

Distinguished Virginian Given Most Cordial Reception at Academy.

OGDEN ENTERTAINS

Refers Briefly to Roosevelt. Booker Washington Incident. Large Audience.

A flattering audience, both as to numpers and personnel, greeted Hon. John S. Wise, who lectured at the Academy of Music last night by invitation of Daughters of the American Revolution In ald of the patriotic movement undertaken by the Daughters for the erection of the Virginia column in the Continental Memorial Hall, at Washington,

The speaker was appropriately introduced by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D. D., who outlined the movement for the memorial to the !!thirteen States," embraced In the first American Union, commended the patriotic endeavor of the women and the patriotic endeavor of the women interpald a fine tribute to Mr. Wise's father, ox-Governor Henry A. Wise, Mr. Wise in his introductory remarks utilized his sponsor's eulogy of his father to evoke the first outburst of laughter and applause that greeted his thoroughly entertaining and at times brilliant and cloquent address.

ining and at times brilliant and cloquent address.

"I thank God," said Mr. Wise, "that my father's fame makes a vicarious atonement for my own shortcomings."

There was no resentment in the reference, and its very good humor and the manner of its utterance made the sally one of the bost of many happy hits, of himself the target.

Mr. Wise said he had not changed in his loyally to Virginia in his seventeen years' absence. Referring to his removal from a State to which he was so attached, he attributed it to the fact that he "had a wine appetite and a beer income," and realized the necessity for seeking a wider sphere.

and realized the necessity for seeking a wider sphere.

Speaking of the Virginian's intense domestic pride, Captain Wise referred to the beautiful Captain Wise referred to the beautiful Captain with its Grecian simplicity upon our Capitoline Hill, but added that it was once beautiful, but now resembled a hay shed flanked by two to-bacco barns. This characterization was received with prolonged laughter.

With this introductory, the speaker then began his address proper, "Personal

With this introductory, the speaker then began his address proper, "Personal Reminiscences of the Presidents from John Tyler to Theodore Rooseveit." Beginning with his boyhood's recollections of John Tyler, Mr. Wise described in detail his first sight of Mr. Tyler at Old Point and in the description incidentally showed the vividness with which childhood's memories cling. The reminiscences of the last Virginia President were thoroughly interesting, as was the hastily ous figures or this crucial era immediate, anticdating the great clash of arms. Mr. Wise attributed to Mr. Buchanan's age and waning virility the great struggle that followed and which he believed might have been averted with a stronger hand at the helm.

Tribute to Davis.

Of Lincoln Mr. Wise knew nothing personally, and so transferred his word portraiture to the other contemporary President, Jefferson Davis, to whom he paid a discriminating, but withal lofty

Of Andrew Johnson, the speaker's knowledge was confined to a meeting in Nastville at the time of Mr. Wise's In Nasaville at the time of Mr. Wise's marriage, when the former President was a guest. His description of the later life of the Tennessean was a rather pathetic, not to say dolorous picture. Hurrying on down the aisles of time, Mr. Wise described his first meeting with Grant on a railway train, when he "butt into" the gruff, taciturn President and had a conversation with him in a smoking car. He referred, en passant, Innocent victim.

Then came Hayes, with whom the speaker's acquaintance was imited, but his analysis of the doubtful Prusident's character and of his official administration was well done and thoroughly interesting. Of Garfield, the lecturer's knowledge was also limited, and was soon exploited with frankness and without pretense of intimacy. He quoted Grover Cleveland in after years as saying that it might have been a mercy instead of a calamity that the Ohloan's career was cut short in the first year of his administration. Of Arthur, his successor, the speaker gave a briefly drawn word picture, and in doing so took occasion to combat the idea that the so-called accidental Presidents were men of small calibre.

Of Cleveland, Mr. Wise spoke with more intimate knowledge formed from a longer and closer acquaintance, and in his characterization of the only living ex-President he scared above political prejudice and culogized the sage of Princeton, erstwhile of Buzzard's Bir, with as much appreciation and with more justice than many a political associte of Mr. Cleveland could have done.

Of McKinley, Mr. Wise's knowledge was chiefly gleaned through their affiliation as members of the House of Representatives, in which body both were contestees before a Democratic jury.

The climax of the lecture in point of interest was the picture of Theodors Roosevelt, and the vigorous portrayal of his career and his characteristics. Mr. Wise's acquaintance began, as he said, when he was judging dogs at a New York slow-sand the Roosevelt boys were enthusiastiq dog fanciers. He followed the careen of the strenous one through his days as a New York legislation, a police commissioner, a civil service commissioner, and assistant searchiary of the navy, and then his brief and ingloriously glorious military career. GOMPERS COMING Prominent Men Asked to Sit or Academy Stage With Him.

Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Lubor, and the greatest general of the labor forces of America, will be the guests of the Center, day, and will make an address on the relations of capital and labor that night at the Academy of the council, on whose invitation he will speak, has charge of the transgements for the meeting at the Academy.

Mr. John M. Ryall, president of the Trades and Labor Council, will preside, and about two hundred cilizens, embracing the largest employers of labor, the city and the State officials, ministers, doctors, lawyers and men in almost every vocation, will be invited to sit on the stage. The list of these was not available last night, when Mr. Mullen was asked for it. It has not been positively determined who will introduce Mr. Gompers, but it will probably be some member of the Trades and Labor Council.

Samuel Gompers is perhaps the greatest organizer and the most discret and conservative leader of labor forces in this country, having developed the Federation of Labor from an insignificant organization into a powerful compact body of two millions. He is also a magnite, attractive and thoughtful speaker.
